

To Whom It May Concern,

Invitation to a Careers and Pathway event for young adults with autism

On Saturday 12th October 2019, we are bringing together a wide range of service providers with the aim of providing advice and options to children with autism and their families, looking at where next after school.

We are running this event as we feel there is a real need for something of this kind focused around the transition stage from school into college, further education or work. We get asked about this a lot at events we attend and are only able to provide information about our own services.

By bringing together a variety of service providers, we hope to offer young adults with autism a real choice in the direction of their future and provide information for their families at this key decision point.

This event is open to anyone in London and surrounding areas that might find it useful, not just our own pupils, and we welcome any students and their families from your school to attend. The event is free for all attendees – we just need them to register with us by email info@beyondautism.org.uk or by calling 020 3031 9705 so we know how many people are attending. I have attached a flyer that provides a little information about the event and would appreciate if you could share this with your parent group, or anyone else you think could benefit.

Kind regards

Leanna Maggs

Marketing & Communications Manager – Events