I started my career as a Civil Engineer working on megaprojects such as the delivery of the 2012 Olympic site and Crossrail. Following a couple of years as Project Manager for internal technology projects within construction, I moved to British Airways. While at the airline, I lead the development of technology for parts of the airlines pricing strategy and ability to provide them into websites such as ba.com and Expedia. Later I moved within the industry to another technology provider working with multiple airlines around the world. Following a recent move, I currently head up the product department for a technology provider within the logistics industry, responsible for the strategy, design and delivery of the business' products.

I am currently Chair of the Management Committee

Ashley College provides a vital role in helping children who attend the school, and their parents. The school allows their pupils to grow and gain confidence to enjoy learning, providing and helping them achieve their goals for moving on from Ashley College.

Through leading the management team, I strive to ensure that we maintain the caring culture and standards of the school, and that we provide a long-term vision to allow Ashley College to improve and grow.

I am an avid sportsman, having run a couple of marathons, cycled to Paris and back with my wife, and play a high level of squash.

I am also an avid reader, with a particular interest in non-fiction, mainly around areas such as social economics or design.
